Motor Mania.

Speed mania selzes those who are primarily living on their nerves. Add to this condition the fact that their untrained and undeveloped muscles and nerve centers are unable to act in instant unison, and the cause of these fatal accidents is not far to seek. When the moment arrives for instantaneous action the driver is occupants are hurled to death. If you are staying at the seashore and an acquaintance-a middle-aged business man-rents a sallboat and asks you and your children to go for a sail, an experienced sailor. If he had not | financial situation. had early and constant experience with beats and sea you do not hesitate to refuse his invitation to go out and get drowned. Now, if this same man offers to take you out in his 40horse power auto you all accept with alacrity. Consider for a moment, says W. L. Haward, M. D., in Saturday Evening Post, where the danger most Hes-in a boat where you all have some chance should she get capsized, or in the auto going 40 miles an hour when it turns over? It is the same old, worn story. Where knowledge and experience step in we use judgment; where a thing is new to us we have no fear. Like a little child, we fear not because we know not. Those blinded to all sense of danger by the psychic excitement of great speed are those ignorant of the force of inertia They are untrained in the judging of speed and distances; they have no grip upon their nervous system; the operators at the different brain centers have never gone on duty, and in a fever of sped impulses these unfitted men rush on to destruction.

Pragmatism.

A new name for some old ways of thinking, pragmatism is to philosophy what a court of arbitration is to capital and labor; it attempts to meditate between arrogant rationalism and complacent common sense. Essentially independent, it follows neither the professional chilosopher on his high a priori road, nor the man in the street with his cocksure notions of truth; rather does it strive to tread a path between the two, a via media from which may be obtained the ideal outlook of the one and the concrete practleability of the other. In this role of mediator, says the Hookman, pragmatism exhibits its admitability to modern demands, finding the world sick of abstractions and at the same time uninspired by the engrent scientific be-Hefs, it offers itself as a tonic to tired minds, a pungent compound which will ciency for the most apposite types of men-the rationalists, who go by principles, the empiricists, who go by facts-for it seems to possess a remarkable insight into the varied

As a result of the recent discussion about the health of the school children, the New York board of education is contemplating the establishment of a department of school bygiene. It will be the duty of this department to act in an advisory capacity on all matters relating to the health of the moull and to recommend safeguards for the protection of his physical welfare. Realizing that it is equally important to conserve the health of the child as to plant the seeds of knowledge in its brain, most of the school commissioners are supporting the scheme. Although it will probably cost at least $50,000 to put the proposal into operation, says the Springfield (Mass.)
